

Where there's brass, there's young music

The Birmingham Schools Brass Ensemble add to the ringing tone of the Festival of Brass Ensembles, which ended in Birmingham last night.

Young musicians from eight schools from all over the country, including the Birmingham school group and the Dudley Schools Brass Ensemble, took part in a day of master classes with experts.

The day in the Adrian Boult Hall of the Birmingham Conservatoire was the climax of two months of regional workshops searching for the best of the country's young brass players.

The members of the London Brass Ensemble, who led the classes, are all distinguished players who devote part of each year to work together with junior musicians.